Library Workshops

Here's the second round of free Library Workshops for the Fall semester. All sessions will be held in the Library Classroom located in the basement. You can register at <http://www.lib.montana.edu/instruction/workshopregistration.php> or feel free to drop in!

Wednesday, October 5 - Wikipedia. Learn how to extract knowledge from Wikipedia, discuss the social implications of this site, and the possible uses of Wikipedia in the academic environment.

Wednesday, October 12 - Tablets and eReaders. Explore how tablets and ereaders can be used for library research. This session includes hands-on time with iPads, Kindle, Nook, and Android tablets.

Thursday, October 20 - Google Secrets. Come explore Google resources. Discover search tricks and techniques to find additional information.

Thursday, October 27 - Zotero. Learn how to use Zotero a free, easy-to-use Firefox extension that enables you to collect, organize, retrieve and share your research sources.

Trial Library Databases

When the Library receives a request for a database, many times we will set up a trial which is a test run to see if the product meets our needs. We currently have trials for the following databases:

British Periodicals (late 17th to early 20th Century) - This database includes searchable full text for nearly 500 British periodicals. Topics include literature, philosophy, history, science, the fine arts and the social sciences.

Library MusicSource - This is an online collection of Western Classical sheet music for over 35,000 works for orchestra, chamber ensemble, piano, organ, voice, chorus, strings, winds, percussion and guitar.

Access to the trials can be found at <http://www.lib.montana.edu/trials/>. Try them out and let us know what you think.
